FROM WASHINGTON.

The New-Orleans Pressure for Robert J. Walker as Secretary of State—Counting the Votes for President and Vice-President—Exciting Discussion—The Investigating Committee again Delayed, &c.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Daily Times.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Feb. 11.

A special messenger left here this evening for Wheatland, bearing a strong document indicative of the preference of the signers for ROBERT J. WALKER as Secretary of State. Among the signers of this document are all the Democratic Senators excepting SLIDELL, BRIGHT and four others who are for GOLD.

Eminent original Buchanan men say that this massies the contest down to WALKER and the Democracy on one side, and SLIDELL, BRIGHT, and CONCORAN, the banker, on the other. Bets run high and about even as to the result. The fight is close, but notwithstanding Democratic "virtue" and "purity," it will not be surprising if the money bags win.

BUCHANAN has withdrawn from the field as a Cabinet candidate, and his friends are understood to be endeavoring to rally the Northwestern influence in behalf of RICE, the present Delegate from Minnesota. It is scarcely possible that this movement can be pushed upon the President elect.

The discussions in Congress to-day, and the attempts to create an impression that no election of President has been consummated, because the joint meeting of the two houses failed to decide whether the Wisconsin vote could be counted, are looked upon by the cool heads as childish, and trifling about the merest quibble. Still there was much excitement, indicating clearly that if the election depended upon the disputed votes, there would be imminent danger of a resolution. Future difficulties of this nature will doubtless be provided for by legislation.

During the count there was much merriment and merry, jovial sotto voce speeching. When Maryland was read, somebody proposed to withdraw FILLMORE from the canvass.

The Committee of Investigation are again delayed, because of the non-arrival of the witnesses for the defense, in consequence of the floods. I understand that one of the parties supposed to be implicated by evidence before the Committee has sent for ARMOUR L. JERMAN to come here to defend him before the House.

Washington has been somewhat afflicted, in some localities lately, with quite an epidemic affecting the digestive organs and throat. Since the snow disappeared the trouble has decreased, but has not quite subsided. We have fine, clear, bracing weather, but no New-York papers, which is a severe misfortune.

There is a project on foot to build a new small but elegant theatre here for Miss FANNY MORANZ. S.

Appropriation for the Suppression of the Slave Trade, &c.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Feb. 11.

The Secretary of State has recommended to Congress the appropriation of $2,000 for the suppression of the Slave Trade, on the principle asserted in the act of 1819, and has favorably indorsed the application of the American Colonization Society for $20,000 for a similar object.

The galleries of both Houses of Congress were densely crowded, to-day, the proceedings throughout producing intense interest.

XXXIVth Congress---Second Session.

SENATE....WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Feb. 11.

COUNTING THE PRESIDENTIAL VOTE.

The Senate proceeded in a body to the Representative Chamber to go into Joint Convention for the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President.

When the Senate returned to their Chamber from the House, Mr. BIGLER, the Teller on the part of the Senate, made a report as to the result of the counting of the Electoral votes, adding the fact that the Electors of Wisconsin did not assemble and cast the vote of that State till the day after the time prescribed by law.

Mr. HUNTER said there would be no difference in the result whether the vote of Wisconsin be counted or omitted, but still he thought the best way to settle the question would be to adopt a resolution that the Joint Committee which had been appointed on the part of the Senate, be instructed to confer with the House Committee, and agree upon such a report as should be satisfactory to both Houses. He situated to cases where similar difficulties have occurred in Michigan and Missouri, and observed that these difficulties had been settled in this way. He concluded by making such motion.

The President announced that in his declaration of the result he had not assumed to decide the question whether the vote of Wisconsin should be counted or not, but had simply declared Messrs. BUCHANAN and BRECKINRIDGE elected.

Mr. NEVEAN said that it was important to decide this question, because a case might come when a similar difficulty might affect the general result. This question must be decided by somebody. If the two houses disagree and do not agree in their decision, who shall decide the question? It should be decided by the Joint Convention of the two houses.

Mr. BUCHANAN's little election about this matter.

He observed the night out and sat to ascertain who was President, except by the slightest rule of addition; but if the Convention could say which votes should be counted and which should not be counted, an occasion might arise when such a Convention in the exercise of its arbitrary power could make a President of the United States without an election.

Mr. SHARP said that the subject had been called Presidential are very dangerous things, and he objected to going on now with a form of supposition case, and making a precedent which might be relied on hereafter. The difficulty in the present case was not of importance, as the result would not be affected by the decision; but it showed the importance of some additional legislation by Congress, declaring the electoral votes, which were not cast on the day prescribed by law, should not be counted in future. He should see no necessity for any further action on the subject this time.

Mr. TOOMBS said, when the Senate was called on to meet the House, for the purpose of hearing the electoral votes counted, it became an important question which were votes and which were not. Who was to decide that question? Suppose a certificate was received that two votes had been cast in Massachusetts, and the presiding officer and the Tellers had said that the votes should go in and be counted, and the Senate had said no? He protested against the action of the presiding officer because he had counted the votes of Wisconsin, in announcing the result, and assumed to exercise the right of saying that JAMES BUCHANAN had 174, and JOHN C. FREMONT 114 votes. It belonged to the Senate and the House to decide which votes should be counted.

Mr. BUTLER thought it was a dangerous power to intrust any one to decide what votes should or should not be counted.

Mr. DOUGLAS said that everything had been done which ought to be done to render the action on the subject complete. The vote of Wisconsin ought not to be entered on the list, for the reason that it was not cast in the electoral college on the day designated by law. The only duty of Congress was to guard against the danger in future.

Mr. SEWARD congratulated the country that there was no necessity for deciding whether or not the vote of Wisconsin shall be counted. He hoped Wisconsin will be counted. He hoped, however, that some measure will be adopted to provide against future contingencies.

Mr. COLLAMER could not see any necessity for the proposed Committee of Conference. It was generally admitted that Mr. BUCHANAN was elected in a constitutional manner, and that was the only question to be determined.

Mr. HALE was decidedly of the opinion that the vote of Wisconsin should be counted. He had always preferred substance to form. The people of that State ought not to be disfranchised because of the inability of the electors to reach the seat of Government at a given day.

Mr. HUNTER, at the request of the Senators, withdrew his motion.

Mr. BUTLER offered a resolution reciting the facts in the case, and concluding with the declaration that Messrs. BUCHANAN and BRECKINRIDGE were elected, but afterwards the Senate accepted a substitute submitted by Mr. COLLAMER, similar in purport, but omitting a reference to the vote of Wisconsin.

On motion of Mr. WELLER the resolution was tabled.

Mr. WELLER offered a resolution that a Committee to consist of one member of the Senate and two members of the House, be appointed to inform Messrs. BUCHANAN and BRECKINRIDGE of their election.

Mr. CRITTENDEN moved an amendment, in substance, that the vote of Wisconsin ought not to be included in the list of Electoral votes, and that any member of either House has the privilege to object to the counting of said vote; and that it was competent for the Senate and House alone to decide that question.

Mr. WELLER appealed to Mr. CRITTENDEN not to insist on the amendment, as the two subjects had no connection.

Mr. CRITTENDEN thought that that was the only way to get his proposition considered at all.

Pending the question the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Feb. 11.

THE SUBMARINE TELEGRAPH BILL.

Mr. BARBOUR moved the reconsideration of the vote by which the Senate Submarine Telegraph bill was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices.

The motion was entered, probably to be considered to-morrow.

THE KANSAS DELEGATE.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine, under the instruction of the Committee on Elections, made a report, concluding with a resolution, that JOHN W. WHITFIELD is not entitled to a seat in this House as the Delegate from Kansas; and moved that the further consideration of the subject be postponed till Saturday next.

Mr. OLIVER, of Missouri, moved to lay the resolution on the table, and made a minority report, and asked to have read the memorial of Mr. WHITFIELD in response to the report of the majority of the Committee.

THE VOTES FOR PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT.

Further proceedings were interrupted by the arrival of the time fixed (12 o'clock) for opening and counting the votes of the electors of the several States for President and Vice-President. The Senators accompanied by their officers entered, the members of the House receiving them standing. The President of the Senate took a seat on the right of the Speaker.

Mr. BIGLER, on the part of the Senate, and Messrs. JONES, of Tennessee, and HOWARD, on the part of the House, acted as tellers, and occupied the Clerk's desk.

The President announced the object of the joint meeting, it being pursuant to law and in obedience to the concurrent order of the two Houses.

The President first opened the vote of Maine, which was read by the tellers, and taking the various States in rotation.

The certificate from Wisconsin having been read, Mr. LETCHER suggested he understood the electoral vote of that State was cast on the 4th instead of the 3d of December, as prescribed by law. He did not know what was now the proper course, but desired that the fact might be brought to the attention of the country. The time might come when such a state of things would convulse the Union.

The President of the Senate said Mr. LETCHER was not in order while the Tellers were counting the votes.

All the votes having been counted, the Tellers reported the result, with the fact that all the returns were found regular and the Electoral votes cast on the proper day excepting those of Wisconsin. These were cast on the 4th instead of the 3d of December.

The President then announced the state of the vote in detail, and in further execution of the concurrent order of the two Houses announced that JAMES BUCHANAN and JOHN C. BRECKINRIDGE were duly elected President and Vice-President for the term prescribed by the Constitution, commencing on the 4th of March next.

Mr. HUNTSMAN MARSHALL said in this case the President, through the Tellers, announced the vote of Wisconsin, but whether this should be done or not must depend on the determination of this Convention and not on the decision of the presiding officer, whose functions, according to the verbiage of the Constitution, go no further than opening the certificates. The case which has now arisen made no difference as to the result, but the time might come when such a state of things would be fraught with the most important consequences to the country.

The President said, the votes having been counted and the result announced, the functions of the two Houses were discharged.

Mr. TOOMBS entered his dissent from the decision of the Chair, which would close the mouths of Senators and Representatives with whom the decision rested.

The President quoted the language of the Constitution relative to the counting of votes, and in justification of his decision.

Mr. BUTLER would regard the reception of the vote of Wisconsin as setting a dangerous precedent. If a State should not, through its electors, vote at the same time as the other States, but reserve its power, with the telegraph running from one end of the Union to the other, it might become the umpire in electing the President and Vice-President. He thought it clear that this vote ought not to be received.

Mr. BRAGG, under the instruction of his associate tellers, stated that they had not yet signed this certificate, they had merely reported the facts.

Mr. CRITTENDEN said that the President's decision involved the privilege of determining the election of President of the United States, and therefore he protested against the decision.

The President replied that he was not aware that he had assumed or exercised any such power. It was his duty to announce the vote, which he had discharged and nothing more.

Mr. GEO moved that the vote of Wisconsin be excluded.

Mr. OLIN said that they could take no vote here, nor could they discuss questions. The only point was to adjourn to their respective houses. They were overturning the Government by making this a National Convention.

Mr. BUTLER concurred in that opinion.

The President said that the duty for which the two houses had assembled, being concluded, the Senate should return to their chamber.

Mr. TOOMBS entered his protest.

Mr. DOUGLAS expressed an opinion that the tellers had no rights to add the certificate to the vote of Wisconsin till the two Houses should so decide. He protested against a dissolution of the joint convention till a decision was made. He was willing that the Senate should retire to consider the question in dispute.

Mr. BRAGG asked what question was to be determined? The business for which the two Houses met had been consummated.

Mr. LETCHER—The business they came to transact.

The President said that no vote could be taken by the two Houses thus assembled, and ruled Mr. OLIN's motion out of order.

Mr. HAVEN submitted that they had not counted the votes. It was his opinion that the vote of Wisconsin ought not to be counted, but it was right that those who thought differently should be heard. The question should be at once determined.

Mr. HUNTER (amid cries of "Order!") moved that the President conduct the Senate back to their chamber.

Mr. BELLINGHUSEN called for the reading of the official certificate showing the cause which prevented the electors from reaching the capital of Wisconsin in time.

VOICES—"We all know what they are."

Mr. COBB, of Georgia, thought it important to know whether this Convention could adjourn by the decision of the Chair, or by their own act. He wanted them to decide whether they had completed the business for which they assembled.

Mr. BUTLER—I call that gentleman to order. It is not a debatable question. My State shall not be treated slidden while I am here.

Mr. COBB—All questions are debatable, unless prevented by special rule.

Much confusion prevailed throughout these proceedings, half-a-dozen gentlemen striving, at the same time, for the floor.

The President said that he would receive the motion that the Senate should return to their own chamber; and that the Senate was in session now.

Mr. COBB, of Georgia—The question arises whether the vote of Wisconsin shall be counted. Let the Senate retire for deliberation, and the desired result can be effected by an interchange of messages.

Mr. TRUMBULL thought that the only way was for each House separately to consider what was best to be done.

The President said the difficulty was, that the count could not be officially known until the Tellers report.

While half a dozen gentlemen were speaking at once, the Senate decided to return to their chamber.

The Speaker resumed the chair, but refused to recognize the gentleman who loudly sought the floor until the Senators had retired.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, called for the regular order of business, and Mr. SEWARD, of Georgia, wanted to know what said business of the Senate.

A VOICE—Send the Sergeant-at-Arms after them.

The Speaker reminded the House that the vote on the resolution declaring Mr. WHITFIELD not entitled to a seat, had not been completed.

The Clerk commenced reading the affirmative vote, but many objections were made to the continuance of that duty, on the ground that the object of the Joint Convention was not yet accomplished.

The Speaker overruled the question, and further decided that the House was not now in Joint Convention.

Mr. OLIN insisted that the Joint Convention had not adjourned.

After a running fire on points of order, and further debate involving the question whether or not the Convention had completed their labors, and whether the Convention was broken up by the withdrawal of the Senate,

Mr. BOCOCK moved that the Senate be invited to return.

Mr. FLORENCE moved that a Committee be appointed to inform Messrs. BUCHANAN and BRECKINRIDGE of their election.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, offered a resolution setting forth that Congress was satisfied of the election of Messrs. BUCHANAN and BRECKINRIDGE, but that for the reason stated it is the opinion of the House that when the Senate again return to the House, the vote of Wisconsin ought not to be counted, and that the Senate be notified of the adoption of this resolution.

Mr. LETCHER suggested that a Committee be sent to the Senate.

Mr. CAMPBELL replied that the Senate went away of their own accord and hence he could not accept the amendment. When they returned he trusted that they would be treated with becoming courtesy.

Further debate was continued, and without taking the question the House adjourned.

VETO OF THE SUPPLY BILL.

Mr. SEAMAN, private Secretary of the Governor, here appeared on the floor and presented the message of the Governor, returning the Supply Bill of 1856 without his signature, and stating his objections thereto.

He objects to the amounts appropriated to the Committees by the Legislature for services performed in the capacity of members as unconstitutional. The points are argued with clearness, distinctness and much force. He expressed his serious regret that so many interests should suffer and that charitable institutions and just debts should be delayed thereby.

Mr. SUTHERLAND moved that the message be made the special order for Friday next.

Mr. BEEBEE hoped the motion would not prevail. He thought that no reason for making the special order, and took occasion to congratulate the House on the firmness and high-minded integrity of the Executive, who had thus returned with his veto this bill of abominations.

The question then being, shall the bill pass over the veto of the Governor, the same was lost by Ayes, 17, Nays, 65.

The bill was declared lost, and a resolution adopted requiring the Commissioners of Record to make a full return of all money transactions.

The State Agricultural Society.

ALBANY, Wednesday, Feb. 11.

The State Agricultural Society met in the Assembly Chamber at 12½ o'clock, to-day, with Hon. Mr. FAXTON, President, in the Chair.

Mr. R. P. JOHNSON read the reports of the Treasurer and Executive Committee.

The Treasurer's report shows the receipts for the year $17,997 99, and the expenditures $16,898 98. The expenditures to be reimbursed are sufficient to leave a balance in the Treasury of $1,149 19.

The report of the Executive Committee enlarges on the progress of the Society, and sets forth the benefits which have accrued to agricultural interests through its exertions.

The attendance was large. Buffalo was represented by a considerable number. An effort will be made to secure the holding of the next State Fair in that city.

Mr. CLARK called up the resolution to amend the Constitution by designating one, two or three places at which the annual fair shall be permanently located.

The Committee reported in favor of Buffalo as the place of holding the next fair. They reported the following officers:

An attempt was made to substitute Syracuse for Buffalo, but it failed, and the report was adopted unanimously.

Dr. FLINT delivered an interesting address before the Society, in the Assembly Chamber, this evening. The address was mainly directed to the destructive agents of insects. He stated that there was more destruction by plants of all kinds from insects in this country than in any other place on the globe, and that they were largely on the increase.

He gave an account of over one hundred species of insects recently discovered. At the close of the address the thanks of the Society were voted to him.

Other matters of general interest to agriculturists were then debated until the adjournment.

The Sunday Papers—Note from the Sunday Times.

OFFICE SUNDAY TIMES,
NEW-YORK, Wednesday, Feb. 11, 1857.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

DEAR SIR: In an editorial article in the DAILY TIMES of this morning upon the subject of Mr. STRAKOSCH and the Press, it is stated that—

"The Sunday papers have been perfectly Spartan in their abuse of the Opera, and have not hesitated to acknowledge that the withdrawal of its advertising patronage is the ground and motive of their censure."

To this statement is appended the following comment:

"It shows conclusively, that their praise or censure is a matter of traffic,—that advertising secures their applause and its refusal their abuse. It is in fact a palpable confession of the most flagrant venality in their management, and must destroy all public confidence in their musical and dramatic criticism. Journals acting thus openly and shamelessly in violation of the first principles of equity and common fairness, have no right to be regarded as 'the City Press.' They reflect no credit on the profession, but damage and degrade it in the estimation of the public."

Now, Sir, as the Sunday Times is certainly one of "the Sunday papers" in this City; as it has never alluded unkindly to Mr. STRAKOSCH or his management of the Italian Opera, and never alluded to either, in any shape, except in the four articles inclosed, (Jan. 11, 18 and 25, and Feb. 1,) you will perceive that you have (of course unwittingly) done us a very serious injustice. As you would scarcely think it equitable to hold the DAILY TIMES responsible for the course of the entire daily Press, you may readily imagine the unpleasantness with which we view language calculated to make us suffer in the public estimation for the errors of our Sunday contemporaries.

Yours truly, NOAH, DEANE & HOWARD.

The Sunday Times is entitled to an exculpation in this matter from our censure, which was perhaps somewhat too indiscriminate. We intended to speak only of the general tone of the Sunday Press and not to say that every Sunday paper was guilty in the manner and to the extent specified.

ANOTHER MURDER.—Toledo appears to be renewing her ancient reputation. The other day a man was killed by a single stroke of a club; and on Saturday last, another man fell by a single stroke of a knife. In this last case, rum, which is at the bottom of nearly all of our frays, assaults and murders, was doubtless the immediate cause of the difficulty. JOHN ENGLE, a German, keeps a boarding-house on State-street, and, on Saturday evening, GEORGE SHAMENSKIE, who married his wife's sister, called in there, and, being intoxicated and noisy, was denied by Mr. ENGLE to leave. He refused to go, and assaulted Mrs. ENGLE, striking her in the face. Her husband undertook to eject SHAMENSKIE, and thrust him into the yard. SHAMENSKIE, drawing a knife, plunged the blade into the breast of his brother-in-law so effectually that he staggered backward a step or two, and fell to rise no more.

Among the incidents of the late fire in Mavericksquare, East Boston, the following is worthy of note: When the fire was discovered, an old drum heard the Council meeting. Assembled around the fire, one of the city men employed in the hose to aid in stopping the conflagration.

Q—Have you ever had, with Mr. Robert [illegible] relation to his connection with this family, or intimacy with it? A—No, Sir.

Q—You know he boarded here, I suppose? A—O, yes, Sir, I know that.

Judge Capron—Coroner, I don't see that we can throw any light upon this subject by further examination of this man; if the jurors, any of them, can think of any question which may [illegible] importance, they can put it.

A Juror—You were very [illegible]

A—Yes, Sir; I was quite intimate.

Juror—How frequently did you see to go with him? A—As often as two or three evenings in a week we would take a walk together.

Juror—Did he never say anything to you, relative to this matter? A—No, nothing at all; only I frequently asked him how he liked [illegible] place, and he said he liked it very well; it was [illegible] place; I called here once, with [illegible] and they both remarked that it was [illegible] place.

Juror—In all his conversations with you, [illegible] talk about the ladies? A—No, Sir; I didn't [illegible] him a very upright man.

Juror—Did you know anything about his [illegible] with other ladies? A—I have seen a lady [illegible] thing about that, but not to my [illegible]

Juror—Is there a young lady by the name of [illegible] didn't you know he was quite [illegible]? A—Well, he has not been [illegible] time; I was pretty well aware he [illegible] intimate with her, but for the last year I don't think he has been.

Juror—You don't know why he was not [illegible]? A—Not particularly.

Another Juror—Do you remember how long [illegible] has lived in this house? A—Well, I have been trying to bring it to memory, and I should think it was [illegible] where near three months.

Juror—What would make it about the time when he came—do you recollect? Could you [illegible] books when the gentleman came to bring [illegible]? A—I think I could if I should refer to the [illegible] part of my books; but I didn't thought of [illegible] over them; it is very handy and I could [illegible] minutes if I had them.

Juror—When did you send the last time? A—It was either Monday or Tuesday previous to the murder being found here.

Juror—When did you return those clothes? A—Saturday night—at least part of them; I was very much drove through the week and did not get my work out, and couldn't return all; so I [illegible] enough for the man to make a change, and a part of them is in my possession yet.

Juror—When did you see Robert for the last time? A—I saw him yesterday evening.

Juror—Somewhat late this? A—A day [illegible]

Juror—Somewhat late this week? A—Yes, Sir.

Juror—I speak of previous to the murder; A—O, on Thursday or Friday morning, to strike me, he was in my place—on Friday forenoon.

Juror—At what time do you generally go to your business in the morning? A—I am there all the time; I sleep in my place and don't go out till about 9 o'clock for my breakfast.

Juror—He called there the last Friday morning? A—No, Sir; I know he did not, but I am almost positive he called there on Friday morning [illegible] about 11 o'clock; he was in the habit of calling [illegible]

Another Juror—Are his shirts marked? A—His shirts are not numbered; my presser is so [illegible] almost every customer's; his pieces are all marked "J. J.;" and our custom is to mark the [illegible]

Juror—You don't know whether he [illegible] complete set? A—I think there are not [illegible]

Coroner—Were you and Robert in the habit of [illegible] ing an correspondence with ladies through the [illegible] son-square Post-Office? A—Well, I have had a small correspondence there I think, but very little.

Coroner—You understand, from such [illegible] those affairs were above—can you point out any particular correspondence regarding this house or its inmates? A—Not any; I never have [illegible] any correspondence with regard to them.

Coroner—Do you mean to say you carried no letters to the Post-Office directed to this house? A—I might have mailed a letter that he might have handed to me for some country town—something of that kind, but no correspondence of that kind; for many years we have been together he would ask me if I was going to the Post-Office, and he would give me a letter to read, and I have mailed them; but what they were I cannot say.

Coroner—Did you consult together about [illegible] Sundays? A—We might have laughed [illegible] about Sundays frequently.

Coroner—Did he say anything to you about [illegible] Connecticut? A—No, Sir; never [illegible] about her frequently—about how he [illegible] to go for her.

[illegible]

Coroner—Is any correspondence he had with you [illegible]

Another wound on the left side, directly above [illegible] of the thorax, in three and a half inches [illegible] Q.—Then you think the other wounds you [illegible] on the left side, directly opposite the last wound? A.—Yes, Sir; [illegible] Q.—Supposing these wounds to be made in the dark, [illegible] would be an impossibility, I think, for any man [illegible] Q.—What I mean is, that the blows, that he was struck, in a condition of [illegible] A.—He might still make a blow or victory.

Q.—What I mean was that the effect of the stabs, as you examined them, were such as not to prevent his crying out? A.—They would not incapacitate him from crying out.

Q.—Would this stab in the neck have caused him to fall suddenly, or heavily, or might he have stood some time? A.—He might have stood some time; it would take but a few seconds to make it a fatal wound.

Coroner.—Nothing surprising, after all, that there should not have been a larger quantity of blood on the floor, from the nature of the wounds, interesting as you do, that a large quantity of blood went into the cavity of the pleura, or he bled on the floor? A.—That might have been the case; but there was a great flow of blood, for his clothes were saturated; but the person who committed the act himself might not have been covered with blood.

Foreman of the Jury, to understand at this—that the wounds were given before the wound in the throat.

Witness.—Yes, the two first wounds in the back were given before the wound in the throat.

Q.—Why, even though the wounds spouted out blood, you say, Doctor, that the other wounds you have described, present no great appearance of blood on the upper extremity of the body, and that this great quantity of blood would not have come from the wounds in the neck? that otherwise there would be a gushing out of blood, and that the throat wound was made last? A.—Yes, if the wound in the heart was given first, in all probability there would not have been a gushing from the carotid; not to that extent.

Mr. Osborne.—Was either of those wounds of such a character, and in such a place as that it alone would have killed him instantly? A.—Yes, Sir; the wound in the heart would.

Q.—The wound in the heart would have killed him instantly, if it had been the first wound? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—If that had been the wound that was first inflicted, would the circumstances have existed that now exist, as to the manner in which that deed was done? A.—No, my opinion is that they would not, Sir.

Mr. Cagron.—I do not see how they could, very well.

Mr. Schwartz, jun.—I cannot understand the position in which Dr. Burdell was? A.—His face towards the entry door.

Coroner.—You described the position of the Doctor at the time he received the wound in the neck as probably with his right hand on the handle of the door. From the nature of the cut would it not have been in a different way, a left-handed person gave that cut, than any one else? A.—As far as that I do not think we should say for any certainty. It might as well have been made with the right hand.

Q.—Supposing the Doctor to ask the question, is, that the man, being at the door, opening the door, I do not think there would have, a priori, been more force in the right hand, I think the blow would come better from the left hand than the right hand. A.—It might; but it could be given by the right hand in this manner (taking hold of a nervous young reporter, in spectacles, who stood by, dodged the descending blow, spoiling the illustration.)

Mr. Osborne.—Were many of the wounds, in your opinion, mortal, even fatal, given to Dr. Burdell? A.—The one in the shoulder might, eventually; the wound in the heart would; the three wounds below it; the wound in the abdomen, and the wound in the thorax.

Q.—Was there any appearance of his having been choked? A.—I did not perceive any marks of strangulation when I saw the body.

Coroner.—If, when the Coroner came, he observed an appearance of ecchymosis, and the tongue was protruded, would not that be caused by strangulation? A.—It might, Sir, to more or less extent.

Mr. Cagron.—What number of the stabs were upward stabs? A.—I can only speak with accuracy of the two in the heart; those were upward and oblique wounds.

Q.—Is there anything about the appearance of the wound in the neck by which you could state with probable certainty whether that was a downward or an upward stroke? A.—As I have stated before, on probing the wound, I am given to believe it was downward anteriorly, and inward.

Q.—If made by a person in front, would it appear that it might be made with a downward stroke? A.—I think it might. [illustrating.]

Coroner.—From long acquaintance, Doctor, with wounds given to persons stabbed in our streets; from the generality of those wounds, in comparison with the wounds on the body of Dr. Burdell, is there anything strikingly remarkable, in your mind, to show that they were given by a man who knew more or less of the human frame? A.—I would say they might be mere matter of accident; they are singularly accurate—that is all that can be said.

Q.—Are they not singularly accurate? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Do I understand you to be of opinion, in your examination of the body and those wounds, that there is nothing indicating that he was held and choked at the time of this conflict? A.—There was nothing indicating it at the time I came here; he might have been held in such a manner about the neck as not to leave any particular mark; a hand might have been placed round his neck for a moment.

Q.—Say for a minute? A.—There is nothing indicating it that I could see; Dr. Knight can speak more particularly in reference to the first sight of the body.

Q.—Suppose a ligature had been put around his neck, or some strong arm or hand tightly compressed it for some time, would the mark remain, and continue long after his death? A.—I think if a ligature had been put around his neck, before his death, there would have been marks.

Q.—If the neck had been compressed with the hand or fingers? A.—I cannot say with certainty whether they would leave any marks; it would depend on the amount of pressure.

Q.—Well, if the pressure was enough to prevent any hallooing or giving of an alarm? A.—It is impossible to say whether that would leave any mark.

Coroner.—But under all the circumstances presented to you—taking the whole body of the wounds—in view of the time and everything else, there would have been sufficient time for a man to have given some alarm or other? A.—I should think he might, Sir.

Mr. Cagron.—In how short a time in your judgment could that whole thing be done, as it appears to you, by a strong man or an ordinary man? A.—I think it all a matter of theory, Sir.

Q.—I did not know but that you might, on scientific ground, give an opinion? A.—No, Sir, it would be impossible to say how long that might; it depends on circumstances.

Q.—What would have been the effect in reference to instant death, or death almost instantly from the wound on the neck, if that had been the only one? A.—If that had been the only one, it would have proved fatal in a very short space of time.

Q.—How long in your judgment? A.—It is impossible to say how long,—but a short space of time.

Q.—Give us some idea of what you mean by a short space of time. How soon, in your judgment, could a man be rendered lifeless by the wound in the neck, supposing that the only one? A.—He might in fifteen or twenty seconds,—perhaps a shorter time; it depends on the individual,—whether he was a stout man, a full-blooded man, or a spare man.

Q.—Was the position of the body changed before you saw it? A.—Yes; I did not see the body until the lapse of two days afterwards.

Q.—The proof is that the body lay straight out, the hands or arms composed against the sides,—the body on its face, extended and straight, as I understand it? A.—I believe that was the case.

Q.—Now, I want to know from you what the position of the body indicates, in reference to its having been put in that position after it was on the floor, or whether it fell in that position?

Witness.—Was the back up?

Mr. Cagron.—Yes, I understand the back was up, his arms composed straight against the sides, the legs extended. I wish to know whether that was a position which the Doctor, in falling, would naturally have assumed? A.—He may have been placed in that position, or he may not. He might have turned himself, although that would be hardly possible, by some convulsive action of the body.

Coroner.—The Doctor's head was near the door, and legs stretched into the room. Would he have likely fallen in that position? A.—I think it probable he fell in that position.

Mr. Cagron.—How long a space of time would it occupy for one man, engaged earnestly in the business, to inflict all those blows on the Doctor? A.—That is a question impossible to answer; it depends a great deal on the individual who inflicted them; you might be able to make those wounds in a shorter space of time than I, or I than you; it depends on the circumstances a great deal.

Coroner.—What portion of time, Doctor, would you lay down that a body, stabbed, suppose at eleven o'clock, would be cold, to the best of your knowledge,—taking into consideration the blood that left the body, the temperature of the room, and everything else? A.—It might be eight to twelve hours.

Q.—You are well aware that after the last pulsations of the heart in death, still there is a throbbing going on for some little time afterwards? A.—Yes, Sir, slight, and of very short duration.

Q.—Do you not think, Doctor, from the various wounds in the body, that the deceased made a desperate struggle to save his life? A.—I think he made a struggle—I cannot say how desperate.

Mr. Cagron.—Doctor, is there any way or any rule by which you can determine with probable certainty, from the examination of a wound, and the description of any of these, that they were perpetrated by a strong or a weak arm? A.—I cannot speak with accuracy on that point, Sir.

Q.—Whether they were done with great violence or with less? A.—Of course we know the character of the wounds would require some force; I cannot say as to the amount of force required.

Q.—Can you, from the fact that a large number of those wounds have been together, form any opinion upon the question whether they were produced or made after the body was down or while it was standing? A.—I have supposed, as my theory, that the wounds in the chest were made after he was down; it is a mere supposition, however.

Q.—Would the fact of there being so many wounds, and of such different depth, in one locality, be indicative of any one state of things which [illegible] A.—[illegible] Q.—[illegible] A.—[illegible] Q.—[illegible] A.—[illegible] Q.—[

The question of entering the city has never been opened since that time. The arrogance of the Chinese was greatly increased by their supposed victory, while the British were marking up their scores for future settlement, and biding their time.

With regard to the origin of the recent collision, it was as follows: On the 6th of October last, a coasting vessel, which was entitled to carry British colors from Hong Kong, registered at the British colony of Hong Kong, was anchored in the river opposite the city. She was commanded by an Englishman, but the crew were Chinese sailors. It was boarded by a Chinese military officer, in command of some Chinese soldiers, who seized and carried off twelve of the men, stating that they were charged with piracy. The vessel was then duly applied to the British Consul, and endeavored to obtain the release of the men, on the ground of their being under the British flag, and not in the magistrate having jurisdiction over them. Mr. Joachimsen offered in evidence the correspondence of last year between Secretary Marcy and Señor Marcoleta, former Minister Plenipotentiary from Nicaragua to the United States, relative to Nicaragua matters. He also offered the proclamation of President Pierce, of Dec. 8, 1855, warning parties against enlisting for Nicaragua, as also a translation of the old laws touching emigration to that country. NICARAGUAN LEGATION, NEW-YORK, May 9, 1855.

The Hon. Secretary of State will by this time have been informed of the results of the trial, and the decision of the Circuit Court of New York, and in the case brought against Colonel KINNEY, Mr. FABENS and their associates, indicted for having attempted to violate the neutrality laws of the United States.

According to the decision of said Court, the defendants were released from the recognizance which had been imposed upon them to the amount of ten thousand dollars each, although they are to remain subject to the insignificant one of one thousand; that is to say, less than the pretended indemnity of fifteen hundred dollars which Kinney, Fabens and Webster are to pay Captain Graham for each day's detention, after the 7th of May last, of the steamers United States, Bird of the Sea and others chartered for the projected expedition.

The undersigned has been informed that the individuals referred to, in company with 500 or 700 persons, are making arrangements to depart immediately from the port of New-York for San Juan, whence they will penetrate into the Territory of the Republic of Nicaragua.

In order that the Hon. Secretary of State may form a thorough estimate of the circumstances, the nature and the objects of this new project, the undersigned will proceed to make a succinct statement of the means which have been employed, and of the real purposes which are intended to be carried out, by these pretended organizations.

Kinney, in his letter published in the New-York Herald of the 19th of April last, among other things asserts: 1st. That he and his associate Fabens have obtained a grant of land from the Nicaraguan Government; 2d. That Fabens has effected several purchases of land which, according to the Journal of Commerce of the 26th or 28th of the same month, amount in the aggregate to two millions of acres.

These two assertions are absolutely and totally false, and they have been published and circulated merely for the purpose of swindling money out of the public.

The same article in the Journal of Commerce also announces that, up to that date, there had been enlisted 600 or 700 colonists, and that it was intended to enlist as many as two thousand, and that the most cordial and perfect harmony existed between the company represented by Fabens, Kinney and Webster, the Transit Company and the Government of Nicaragua.

In another subsequent article, of the 30th of April, the editors of said newspaper, desiring, undoubtedly, to avoid the responsibility of having published absurd and calumnious statements, arising, perhaps, of their easy credulity, represented that they were indebted for the facts they had formerly published to information imparted to them personally by Col. Kinney, by Mr. Webster, and by the United States Commercial Agent at San Juan.

The undersigned leaves it to the judgment of Hon. Secretary of State to form a proper estimate of the conduct of these men, which, in the absence of good, valid and substantial reasons, resort to artifice and fraud in order to blind the community, to lead public opinion astray, to satisfy at the expense of their victims a badly dissembled cupidity, and to carry into execution plans of the most criminal description against the security, the integrity and the independence of a friendly, weak and inoffensive Republic, which has constantly invited the most positive and convincing proofs of the cordial, although unprofitable, friendship which attaches it to the American Government and people.

There are, moreover, various other circumstances closely connected with those which have just been mentioned.

Mr. Fabens presented himself some weeks ago at the office of the Nicaragua Transit Company, stating that the territory of that Republic could soon day or other fall into the power of the Americans and that now that an opportunity was offered he and his associates ought to take advantage of it. Fabens concluded his visit by expressing the strongest desire that Mr. J. L. White would have an interview with Col. Kinney.

A few days afterwards, if not on the very next, Fabens again visited said office in company with Kinney, who stated to Mr. White, in the presence of said Fabens, that his intentions were to join one of the belligerent parties in Nicaragua, by this means to overcome the other, and after putting both of them down to form down to form a new Government.

A characteristic circumstance, which demonstrates the usual enthusiasm produced by the excitement of, and thirst for adventure in the existence and circulation of a new map of Nicaragua, embellished with likenesses of Kinney and Fabens, and in which the points are marked where the new cities of Montefuna, Cortez, Fabensville, and Kinneyville are to be built.

These facts, and the enlistments which were being publicly made in Philadelphia and New-York, the condition of those enlisted, who, for the most part, do not belong to those classes which produce idlers of the soil and workers of the mines, filled the undersigned with the most violent and well grounded suspicions, and induced him to make the affidavit subjoined to the decision of the Grand Jury, before whom Mr. White likewise made his appearance, for the purpose of making a declaration and swearing to the facts referred to.

And it being now very notorious that Kinney, Fabens, Webster, and their pretended colonists, are making arrangements to carry their criminal designs into execution, without the least delay, the undersigned believes that he would incur the greatest and strictest responsibility did he refrain from soliciting of the Hon. Secretary of State, as he does in fact, and seriously solicit here, those measures and means of suppression which, in the judgment of the United States Government, may seem best adapted to prevent, if it be possible, the departure from ports of the United States of every vessel which may have been chartered for the purpose, and which may convey the originators, the promoters and the accomplices of the new outrage which is meditated.

At the same time the undersigned has the honor to call the attention of the Hon. Secretary of State to the unbecoming and unlawful course pursued in this affair by the United States Commercial Agent at the port of San Juan. The Government of Nicaragua would experience the greatest satisfaction in perceiving that the Hon. Secretary of State believed he had sufficient and well-grounded reason for removing Mr. Fabens from the position he now holds at San Juan, as an atonement for the act of aggression which he is on the point of committing, as well against his own Government, as against a friendly people, who are now in the most perfect harmony with the American people and Government.

In the Circuit Court in New York, Messrs. Hoffman and Eager, counsel for the accused, made an appeal in behalf the interests of their clients, and urged the expense, injury and damages which they would incur in case of a postponement of the trial of the cause. As if there were not still greater interests to be defended and respected, when the attempt was made to violate the most sacred laws of society, to commit aggressions upon and appropriate the property of thousands of individuals, and to outrage the rights of two friendly and brotherly nations, wounding the one in its very honor and assaulting the other in its most precious prerogatives and its dearest interests; and this, too, by lawless individuals, in whose eyes truth, justice and morality have lost all their force and vigor, all their brilliancy and all their splendor.

The laws against filibustering expeditions have not prevail, justice can have influence; and there are acts in favor of which reason will have influence if justice is against them. Account may have unpunished, in the absence of material proof, certain real and positive acts which can and ought to claim the feasible intervention and energetic exercise of Executive authority. Such an one, in the opinion of the undersigned, is the case here submitted for the consideration and approval of the honorable Secretary of State, to whom the undersigned has the honor to renew the assurance of his most distinguished consideration.

J. DE MARCOLETA.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The Burdell Investigation was continued yesterday, but its developments were trivial and unimportant. The Coroner received a telegraphic dispatch from Philadelphia, stipulating that the [illegible] of C. G. Fanelli, of this City, [illegible] was cleared up. The first witness examined yesterday was George Douglass, the proprietor of a laundry establishment, at which Eckert and others were washed. He observed nothing unusual in the articles received from Eckert and Snowman, after the murder was discovered; so the night evidence effected nothing. The Coroner announced his determination to receive no anonymous letters hereafter in reference to the murder; persons having communications to make to him must sign their own names. James Scott testified that he knew Farrell, the witness, who was conversing with Eckert on Tuesday; he had always considered Farrell an honest and reliable man; had no idea that this he knew nothing. Dr. Geo. T. Westbrook, who examined the wounds of Dr. Burdell, put in, in evidence, a written document, describing the appearance of the wounds. He gave his theory of the manner in which the deed was committed; basing that theory upon his observations of the direction and extent of the stabs on the person, he concludes that the Doctor was seated at his table when he received the first blow in the shoulder from some one who approached him stealthily from behind,—that on receiving this blow, the Doctor rose and made his way towards the door, and that while his hand was upon the knob, he was struck the blow which severed the carotid artery,—that the stabs in the side were given after he fell,—and that neither the shoulder wound nor that in the neck would have been sufficient to prevent him from making an outcry. Other witnesses were examined, but their testimony was entirely unimportant.

The votes for President and Vice-President were counted before the two Houses of Congress, in joint convention, yesterday, and Mr. Buchanan was declared President, and Mr. Breckenridge, as Vice-President, were declared duly elected. The question was immediately raised as to counting the vote of Wisconsin, the electors of that State having met on the 4th, instead of the 3d of December, when the presiding officer decided that the functions of the two Houses had been discharged in the premises. This decision was dissented from by both Senators and Representatives, and much discussion ensued. At length, it being decided that no vote could be taken in convention, the Senate adjourned to their Chamber, and both Houses continued the consideration of the subject, without however, coming to any conclusion. A motion to reconsider the vote by which the Submarine Telegraph bill was referred to the Post-Office Committee, will, probably, be considered to-day. Majority and minority reports from the Committee on Territories, relative to the Kansas Delegate case, were presented.

In the State Senate yesterday, a new bill to reorganize the Police Department of this City was introduced, and ordered to be printed. In the Assembly, favorable reports were made on the bills to reserve the slips on the East River, between Piers Nos. 2 and 10, for canal boats during the season of canal navigation, and to authorize the Staten Island Railroad Company to run ferry-boats. The Message of the Governor vetoing the Supply bill of 1856 was received, and after an unsuccessful effort to make it the special order for to-morrow the attempt was made to pass the bill over the veto, but it failed—the vote being Ayes 17, Noes 65.

Latest advices from Mexico represent the country to be unusually quiet, the only trouble proceeding from the rebellious disposition of the Clergy; some of whom it had been found necessary to proceed against in a summary manner. A rumor prevailed that the Apostolic Nuncio had demanded his passports preparatory to leaving the country.

The New-York State Agricultural Society met yesterday at Albany, and elected theirs officers for the ensuing year, a list of which will be found elsewhere. The Treasurer's report shows a balance of upwards of a thousand dollars in favor of the Society. Buffalo was fixed upon as the place for holding the next meeting.

Three steamers are now due from Europe. The Niagara at Halifax, the Anglo-Saxon at Portland, and the Southampton at this port.

A steam-boiler exploded near Buffalo, yesterday, by which the engineer, fireman and five laborers were killed, and several others were injured.

The subsiding of the waters of the Hudson River, at Albany, shows the losses in the lower part of the city to have been very great. The fronts of all the warehouses about State-street Bridge have been battered in, and some are entirely gone. The bridge, itself, is a complete wreck. The river is again frozen over so that teams can cross.

Quimby & Co.'s coach factory, at Newark, N. J., was destroyed by fire last evening, very little of the stock being saved. The fire was spreading at the latest accounts.

Hosea J. Gardner, Postmaster at Hingham, Mass., recently died from being poisoned by arsenic, and circumstances point to his wife as being guilty of administering it to him. The affair has caused much excitement in that community.

An amendment to the Constitution of Missouri has passed the popular branch of the Legislature of that State, restricting the State debt to $30,000.

The steamer James Adger returned from Hampton Roads last evening with the ship Samuel Russell in tow. By this arrival we have full details of the situation of the frozen fleet in the Chesapeake up to Monday, from our Special Reporter, who accompanied the expedition, and has been an eye-witness of what he relates.

The filibuster examination was continued yesterday. Some of the correspondence of Secretary Marcy to Mr. Marcoleta, the former Minister from Nicaragua, relative to Nicaraguan matters, was submitted in evidence. Capt. Crouch, late of Gen. Walker's army, was the only witness examined. He answered such questions as he chose, but declined peremptorily to give any information touching military matters in Nicaragua.

Edward Davis, charged as implicated with Carpentier, Gharet and Balot in the French National Railway fraud, has been arrested, and is now lodged with the other prisoners in the Eldridge-street Jail. The officers have been on the lookout for him a long time. The examination by Commissioner Betts of the parties, which was assigned for yesterday, relative to sending them to France for trial, was adjourned till next Monday, on account of the occurrence elsewhere of [illegible].

In the Board of Aldermen last evening, a resolution was adopted, giving a Special Committee power to send for persons and papers in relation to the want of accommodation given the people by the City Railroads. A communication from the President of the Dry Dock Company stated that the Committee on Markets, to whom his proposition to the Board to sell the city a market site had been referred, had reported adversely thereto without ever holding a meeting or giving him an opportunity to appear before them. The Councilmen met last evening but did nothing of public importance.

In the Superior Court yesterday two important decisions were rendered. The one on the specification of the nature of the abandonment in marine insurance, and the other on the recovery of the amount of insurance money after a loss, before the delivery of the policy.

William Burdell, applied yesterday to the Surrogate for letters of administration upon the personal (as Monday he did for the administration upon the real) estate of his brother, the murdered Dr. Harvey Burdell.

A Brooklyn lady of respectable family and only two months married, yesterday morning in a paroxysm of insanity escaped from her husband's watch, went to the privy, stripped herself, and leaping into the vault met a horrible death.

The New Administration—Difficulties of Mr. Buchanan's Position.

If it be true that "uneasy lies the head which wears a crown," untold must be the embarrassments and dilemmas which perplex a President of the United States, especially at the beginning of his Administration. A late number of the London Morning Post applauds with reason the wisdom of the framers of our Constitution, in assigning an interval of several months between the election and inauguration of our Chief Magistrate, during which to ponder at leisure the difficulties of their position. The use which is made of the third of a year, preceding their accession to the responsibilities of their high office, is indeed the safest trial of the competency of our Presidents elect, and the surest test by which to weigh their chances of an honorable or an inglorious career of authority.

The excessive caution, which is a striking characteristic of Mr. Buchanan, has not been sufficient to exclude judgment, already, respecting the course of action he may adopt. It is abundantly evident that he is keenly sensitive, both with regard to the obstructions to a successful programme, and the severe account he will be held to by the millions with whose interests he is intrusted. He knows that there are shoals and quicksands, which it will require almost unprecedented sagacity to steer clear of, and enticements which it will demand unusual fortitude to resist. The selection of a Cabinet, and a proper choice of foreign and local federal officers, are, excepting so far as they indicate a policy, of minor importance, when compared with a plan to be adopted, in relation to the paramount question of the day, which shall satisfy the country, put an end to sectionalism, and remove the reproach which has been cast upon us, both at home and abroad, during the past four years.

The indications thus far, since the election, respecting Mr. Buchanan's course on the Slavery and territorial questions, have been favorable. His associations, speeches and letters, as well as the changed tone of the Southern journals in his interest, point to an impartial, liberal and anti-sectional administration. It, nevertheless, remains to be seen whether the wise policy thus foreshadowed will be adhered to. The very amiability and tenacious caution of Mr. Buchanan's character render him liable to be borne down against his better judgment by the opposition of determined will. It is well known that an intestine warfare is waging in the Southern Democratic camp—in fact, between the national and fire-eating parties at the South—which is all the more bitter because the inflammation, so far, has been rather internal than external. It is evident, if Mr. Buchanan perseveres in the programme which is attributed to him, that the heart-burnings between North and South will speedily come to an end; but that they will be succeeded by the malignant dissunion opposition to his administration, of that portion of the Southern population which is represented by Jefferson Davis, Toombs, the Charleston Mercury, the New-Orleans Delta, Mr. Stephens, of Georgia, Hunter, and the seven divine-right Pro-Slavery men in the House of Representatives. Senator Slidell and Governor Wise, of Virginia, who will probably succeed to the first vacancy from his State to the United States Senate, may, probably, be counted on as heads of the Southern Union Democrats in Congress, and of the vast majority of the people in the Slaveholding States. The head and front of the secessionists will be Jefferson Davis, whose place in the Senate is secure for the next six years. What his faction lack in strength, will be amply made up for by frantic fanaticism, unceasing threats, and the noise and bustle which signalize a rebellion. Each of the two parties claims its Northern adherents. Those of the Toombs-Davis clique refer to the Dickinson-Walker Hard-Shells of New-York, Toucey, of Connecticut, Douglas, Shields and others as their supporters, while Marcy, Cass, Clifford, Glancy Jones, Dodge, the Softs of this State, nearly all the Democratic members of Congress elect from the North, are looked to by those who are contented with a strict and literal interpretation of the Kansas-Nebraska law, and do not desire that the Federal Government should be made a tool for the extension of Slavery.

The all-important question of the day, is, what will Mr. Buchanan decide upon in these circumstances? Will he fall back into the errors of his predecessor, or hold the reins of Government impartially, with the firm hand and iron will which are claimed for him by his Northern adherents? We sincerely trust the latter. If he is aided by the powerful influence of Governor Wise, whose conversion to broad Union views, since the Presidential election, is asserted strenuously by his friends, the opposition of fire-eaterism, though violent, can be but transient in the States of Virginia and Maryland. The Hamilton speech of Mr. Breckinridge may also be looked upon as the full expression of the views of the future Vice-President upon the subject of Slavery, and they are, to say the least, far more enlightened than we have been accustomed to hear, for the last few years, from Southern orators. Mr. Buchanan is said to have declared, a few weeks ago, that he should give "the widest latitude to Democrats of both sections of the country." If he sustains that resolve, it will be a cause for the highest satisfaction.

City Reform.

Our citizens are awaiting with a good deal of anxiety the action of the State Legislature, in regard to Reforms in our City Government. The conviction is universal that some reform is imperatively required,—that the enormous expense to which the City is subjected,—the flagrant abuses known to prevail in every department of the public service, and the comparative inefficiency of the Government for all useful purposes, demand some measures of redress. And although the fault rests primarily upon our own people,—upon their neglect to choose honest and capable men for places of trust and power,—much of the evil is traceable directly to defects in the machinery by which these powers are exercised. We cannot have a Charter which shall make rogues honest;—but we can have one which shall render it more difficult than it is at present for rogues to rob and plunder the public.

There are some very important amendments to our present charter, upon which nearly all are agreed. The conviction of men of all parties is, that the Common Council is badly organized, and that the system of separate and irresponsible executive departments has proved a failure. Everybody feels that the Board of Councilmen is too large for any good purpose,—that it invites dishonest men to seek an election to it, and that it imposes no check whatever upon the action of the other Board. It ought to be reduced;—and we think the general impression would be in favor of making it the smaller and the superior of the two branches of the Common Council—since there is an obvious absurdity in making it merely the duplicate of the other Board. At all events, it is too large now, and everybody would favor its reduction.

So also all classes and all parties are in favor of changing the system of Executive departments,—of having them no longer elective, but let them be filled either by one branch of the Common Council upon the nomination of the Mayor, or by the joint action of the two Boards. It would be highly desirable also to have them organized as a Board, acting together upon matters of general interest and made responsible, each for his own department, directly to some central authority. The great evil in our present municipal government is lack of responsibility. There is no such thing as a general supervising authority. Each department is isolated and independent—acting upon its own authority and without check or oversight from any quarter.

Upon these points and some others that might be mentioned there is no great difference of sentiment among our citizens. Why, then, cannot the Legislature at once amend our charter in these respects, and afterwards take up those matters concerning which there is more doubt? The apparent purpose to combine all the various measures relating to the City, and act upon them all at once, is likely to end in the defeat of all. This is precisely the reason why nothing has been accomplished for the last two years upon this subject. The Legislature undertakes too much at once. The several bills required are brought forward as parts of a general system, and each thus shares whatever odium or opposition may exist against any other,—whereas each should stand upon its own merits.

The Legislature, it strikes us, would do well to pass at once such an amended charter as the City needs. Then the questions of a Police Commission—a commission for the Central Park and one for the new City Hall, and other matters which give rise to controversy, can be brought up in order and decided each for itself. But something should be done at once, else the whole will be thrust into the very close of the session and stand a very good chance of not being acted upon at all.

Marine Signals.

During the last session of Congress, a bill to "provide for the general introduction of a uniform code of Marine Signals," was introduced to the Senate and quietly slipped through the forms of legislation, without attracting any public attention. That bill is now before the House of Representatives, under a recommendation of the Committee on Commerce; and the shipowners of New-York and Boston, who have discovered that, if it becomes a law, it will impose on them an unnecessary and unjust tax, are sending in remonstrances against its passage.

The bill in question proposes that a system of marine signals, recently invented by Mr. Henry J. Rogers, shall be adopted as our national code of marine signals; and that every vessel sailing under the United States flag whose burden is three hundred and fifty tons and upwards, shall be supplied by its owner with a complete set of Rogers' signal-flags and a copy of Rogers' chart-books explaining them. This supply to be made within twelve months from the passage of the bill; and the penalty for every neglect to be $300, to be enforced by a seizure and forfeiture of the unsupplied vessel.

This is certainly a most remarkable bill. We doubt if Congress ever discussed a more outrageous scheme for legalizing a private monopoly than this; which is to compel the commerce of the United States to pay tribute to the ingenuity of a private speculator in charts and bunting! This bill fixes the price of the charts at $10, and the cost of a set of signal flags will average from $35 to $40. So every individual in the United States who owns a ship, bark, brig or schooner of 350 tons and upwards, must, within a year from the passage of the bill, if it be allowed to pass, pay about $50 into the pocket of Mr. Henry J. Rogers! If he refuse to pay this tax the Collector of the Custom House in his District will report the fact to the District-Attorney, who will immediately libel the unsupplied vessel, condemn it and sell it—unless the owner will pay a penalty of $300 and costs! There are perhaps ten thousand vessels, sailing under the United States flag, whose owners would be compelled, by this act, to expend nearly a half a million of dollars, for no possible benefit to themselves or to any department of commerce.

What powers of persuasion were used to pass this bill through the Senate, we have been unable to learn. We are glad to see that the House is disposed to scrutinize it. There is no necessity for any national code of marine signals. The signals now generally used by American and English ships, and which have, for many years, been recognized by the ships of all nations, [illegible] and they are sufficient for every communication that can be desired between ship and ship, or between a ship and a signal station on shore. All well-equipped European ships are supplied with Marryat's signals, and nearly every American ship sailing to a foreign country takes them and uses them. They have become, by a common usage, the international signals of commerce; and any attempt by Congress to supersede them, in our own ships, by the invention of Mr. Rogers, will only create trouble, and will render the whole system of flag conversation between American and foreign ships unintelligible and useless. Congress cannot compel British, or French, or Spanish, or Dutch ships to hoist Rogers' signal flags. Of what benefit, then, can they be to our own ships, which are constantly associated with the ships of these nations?

However superior Rogers' system of flags may be to Marryat's, its merits have never been tested by experience. But if experience should demonstrate its usefulness, any new improvement in the general system of flag telegraphs, which may be made hereafter, will be permanently excluded from adoption by the passage of this monopoly bill. If Rogers' system is really more valuable than any other, it will gradually work its way into favor without the compulsory assistance of Government. To force the system into adoption is an outrage upon our shipowners, which will only be the initiation of greater wrongs. For if Congress may dictate to our shipmasters what signals they shall fly from their mastheads; why may it not also direct what compass shall swing in the binnacle of our ships, what barometer shall hang in the cabin, what chronometer shall measure the time, on what chart the master shall track his course, of what duck the topsails shall be made and of what hemp the rigging, whose patent windlass, or capstan, or chain stopper shall be used; and, indeed, why may not Congress order that Bowditch's venerable epitome shall be thrown overboard, and its place supplied by the theories of some tyro in the mathematics of navigation? If the power "to regulate commerce," which the Constitution confers upon Congress, may be used to legalize a speculation in signal flags; it may also be used to force upon our shipowners any other monopoly, whether the interests of Commerce require it, or not. And it is not difficult to foresee that there will be no end to the evils consequent upon such a despotic system of legislation.

Inaugural Speeches.

Apropos to the near approach of Mr. Buchanan's inauguration as the eighteenth regularly elected President of the United States, the Pennsylvanian takes a retrospect of all the inaugural speeches of his predecessors, all of which it is to be remembered have been delivered since he was born, so young and so as a nation. Washington delivered his first and only inaugural speech to the Senate, as did both Adams and Jefferson, but he delivered none on his second election. Though Jefferson delivered his first inaugural in the Senate Chamber, it was addressed to his "Friends and Countrymen." Since his time the inaugural speeches of the Presidents have been addressed to the people, and have been delivered from the portico of the Capitol. Though they have come to be regarded as an essential part of the ceremony, they do not necessarily belong to it, and are, in fact, extra-Constitutional. They are purely voluntary on the part of the President, who is only required by the Constitution to take the oath of office. If Mr. Buchanan should see fit to dispense with an inaugural address altogether, he might do so, and he might plead the example of Washington at his second inauguration as a precedent. But he will not probably venture upon such an innovation, and knowing the fondness of the people for bunkum speeches he will gratify them. The inaugurals of our Presidents have not been remarkable productions. Jefferson's first inaugural contained two expressions which have become part of the currency of speech viz: "The full tide of successful experiment," and "entangling alliances," a phrase which has been generally attributed to Washington. General Harrison's allusion to the "remark of a Roman Consul," and General Taylor's "all the world and the rest of mankind," are all that the inaugurals of our other Presidents have contributed to the currency of conversation. General Harrison's inaugural is further remarkable in being longer than that of any other of the Presidents, and for containing a distinct avowal that he would not be a candidate for reelection. Poor old man! In another month and he was in his grave. Gen. Taylor has the credit, which should not be lightly esteemed, of making the shortest address of any of our Chief Magistrates. Gen. Pierce is the only President who committed his inaugural to memory, and spoke it, like a school-boy, instead of reading it as a State paper, copies of which had already been placed in the hands of the people. We shall see very soon what peculiarities there may be in the inaugural of Old Buck, who may be regarded as the last of our Presidents who lived in the days of Washington.

Necessity for a Postal Money-Order System.—It must be confessed, to our great discredit, that the Postal system of the United States is practically inferior to that of any European country. In one of its most important branches—the safe conveyance of money—it is wholly deficient. A merchant prefers to intrust an express company rather than the Post-Office department with a valuable package, and though the inadequacy of the latter to supply the great and increasing wants of the people is notorious, yet year after year passes away, and we do not see the slightest effort at improvement. If, to obtain such improvement, we were obliged to wait, by force of circumstances, until some new and unheard-of plan could be successfully adopted, there might be some excuse for this negligence. But plans have been already invented, and, in other countries, are worked with the most marked success. We have only to adopt them—to put into practice a system, the benefits of which have been already demonstrated;—yet we refuse to make the attempt, and cling to our old fogyism with a tenacity wholly opposed to the general spirit of Yankee go-ahead-ativeness.

Our present system of registering letters is a humbug. Every one knows it to be a humbug. It offers no more security for the safe transmission of a valuable letter than is to be found in the ordinary channel. The only difference is that an extra charge is made for the [illegible] money intrusted to the mails, [illegible] than for other letters. The question of insuring sums of money through Post-Office orders has existed in Great Britain for a long period. In Canada, also, the same system has been in successful operation for several years. It is estimated that over $50,000,000 are annually transmitted through the British Post-Office by means of money orders, and not two dollars in the million are, within the same period, lost by mail robberies, fire or other causes. This is surely ample proof of the safety of this mode of transmitting money. In Great Britain no order is issued for over five pounds sterling, but we see no reason why orders should not be issued, as in Canada, to the extent of twenty-five pounds or $100. According to the English plan, every Post-Office is a money-order office; but in Canada only the larger offices, or about one eighth of the whole number, are authorized to draw money orders. These, however, are details which may or may not be adopted according to circumstances. We want the system first, and can make improvements afterwards.

We believe that the establishment of some safe mode for the transmission of valuable letters amounts now to a necessity, and the want of it should no longer be tolerated. We trust that the matter will receive the attention of Congress before adjournment. Its importance to the mercantile community cannot be overestimated; and the adoption of the British money-order system will be invaluable to the whole public, and will make a considerable addition to the revenue of the Department. The charges made in England for issuing orders are on a scale of one half per cent, and our people would willingly submit to even a higher tax, provided it insured the safe conveyance of their letters. The benefits of the system would be felt by every class of the community and especially by subscribers to newspapers and other periodicals.

The Newspaper as a Detective Agent.—It has probably occurred to many persons, during the progress of the Burdell inquest, that the publicity given to the proceedings has been a serious impediment to the ends of justice. If the whole investigation had been secret no one witness could have known what another had stated,—nor could parties cognizant of facts have been advised of measures which may have induced them to keep out of the way.

This is plausible and to a certain extent true: but there is decidedly another side to the story. All the important testimony thus far given has been elicited by the public press. It is curious to observe how utterly useless, for purposes of detection, the Police of the City has been from the beginning of this inquest. Not a single important witness has been discovered,—nor a single clue traced by this Department of the City Government. The most pertinent evidence has been given by parties who had been overheard to converse on the subject, and whose names have been given to the Coroner generally by anonymous letters:—and these conversations have been elicited solely by the reports and comments of the Press. Farrell, the most important witness of all, never thought of any special connection between his sitting upon the door-step of No. 31 Bond-street, and the murder, until he read the reports in the papers; and even then he would not have come forward if the conversation into which these reports betrayed him had not been repeated to the Coroner. The same thing is true of several of the other witnesses.

The truth is, the public mind is stimulated to an extraordinary activity by the publicity given to the details of the case in the Press. Curiosity is aroused,—every one becomes eager to aid in detecting the guilt,—and thus every reader of the newspaper becomes a volunteer detective. If publicity, therefore, has its drawbacks, it has also its advantages: and we have little doubt that an inquest into any mysterious crime, is on the whole, greatly aided by the journals of the day.

Return of Winter—Where's E. M.?—After a few days of southerly breezes, sunshine and sloppy walking, the wind has veered round again to the northwest, and the mustaches of gentlemen who sport these embellishments are again hung with icicles when they go out of doors. Our weather friend of Brooklyn Heights, who put on his thin shoes and Summer costume to go up among the Adirondack Mountains in search of cold weather, like Mephistopheles on the Brocken, might have been gratified to his heart's core if he had remained in his own wooden house among his thermometers. The last news from him left him among "the mountains," and we fear that when we hear from him again he will be lying upon a bed of frozen bulbs, as stiff and stark as the frigid tubes of his thermometers. We hope not. But what can be expected when a man goes wandering among the mountains of the North in mid-Winter with nothing on but the dress he wore in July? Since E. M. went off on his Northern explorations, the weather has been playing all sorts of antics, and nobody has been able to tell whether we were in the middle or at the end of a cold cycle. It is high time that E. M. came back; we miss his valuable communications about yesterday's weather.

Worthy of Imitation.—The city of Boston is not much larger than one of our up-town Wards, yet the Common Council of that enterprising little metropolis of New-England has appropriated $18,000 to defray the expense of cleaning the streets of snow after the late heavy snow-storm. The money was well expended, and, if ten times the amount had been appropriated here for a similar purpose, it would have been true economy; though the money might have been spent without the streets being much benefited by it. Under the administration of Mr. Commissioner Ewing something more than money is necessary to secure us unobstructed streets.

The British Minister.—The following paragraph from a distinguished member of the British Parliament, gives us an inkling of the character of the new British Minister:

"I hope you will like Napier. He is clever and well-disposed—somewhat formal and (if I may make bold to say so) Bostonian in his manner, but his wife is very pretty and pleasant."

A LETTER OUT OF LIBERTY.

Our Correspondence at Liberty—[illegible] to Land Bill, &c.

[illegible]

It will probably be remembered by many persons that he then stated a long story to the effect that he is released from the [illegible] of [illegible] that his [illegible] of necessity based upon false representations made from time to time. Gently—if you please, reader. The time is not yet ripe for the [illegible] which has been perpetrated. In a few words I may say so much—that the Committee of Congress will be fully satisfied, I think, that the Minnesota Land Bill, which was so hurried through the Senate by Mr. Toucey, for Mr. Douglas, I understand, [illegible] hundred miles of such, instead of [illegible] hundred miles before, and that the grants [illegible] made direct to the Territory, but not in favor of a [illegible] company composed of speculators, who make their interests provable without [illegible] by for improper purposes. If the Bill of last session is to pass at once. By voting such a bill now, Congress may consider the [illegible] Minnesota [illegible] Congress [illegible] that it is not fit to receive the votes of [illegible]

United States Supreme Court.

Washington, Wednesday, Feb. 6.

United States vs. The Minnesota and N. W. Railroad Company.—Chief-Justice Taney delivered the opinion of the Court. This was a motion to [illegible] a case which had been decided. Held that where a case had been regularly argued and submitted, the Court would refuse a rehearing—unless some member of the Court having acted with the majority should entertain a doubt as to the correctness of the opinion given. This rule was inflexible. No member of the Court doubting the correctness of the opinion delivered in the case, the motion is overruled.

Edmund Rice vs. The Minnesota and N. W. Railroad Company.—This opinion was also delivered by Chief-Justice Taney—who held that the amounts in controversy being larger or smaller could not be permitted to affect the rights of litigants in the Court. This case stands No. 91 on the docket and will not be reached for twelve months. The motion was for taking the case up out of its order in consideration of the large interests involved. Every suit stands upon equal footing, and must be called in its turn on its merits upon the docket. To this rule there are but two exceptions—1st, When the case concerns the Government in the collection of her revenues; and 2d, When the life or liberty of a citizen is involved. Motion overruled.

No decision to-day in the Court of Claims.

Washington, Wednesday, Feb. 6.

Case No. 97.—Argument concluded.

Peter G. Wheeler, of New-York, was admitted an Attorney and Counsellor.

Academy of Music.

Verdi's opera of "Ernani"—we wish that it were equally green and perpetually planted—was produced here last night to a good house. The performance was good, especially Mlle. Parepa's Leonora, Signor Mazzoleni's Carlo, Signor Quintilia's Ernani himself, and song as he always does, charming and like an artist—but the creation produced some good effects which were not altogether pleasant.

On Friday night the "Trovatore" will be played for the last time. This will be the last night of the season under Mr. Benedict—a season which, we are happy to say, has been successful, in spite of much violent and unprincipled opposition.

TIMOTHY DALY, Esq., Chairman, &c.

Dear Sir: We acknowledge with deep emotion the receipt of your note of the 8d inst., in behalf of the Heads of the Central Ward of the Almshouse, inviting us to a Public Dinner, as a kind recollection of our united service while sharing with our brother Governors in the duties of the affairs committed to the charge of the Governors of the Almshouse. NEW PUBLICATIONS.

NOW PUBLISHED—ONLY COMPLETE EDITION.
FRANK FORESTER'S SPORTING SCENES AND CHARACTERS.
CONTAINING FULL REMARKS OF ALL SHADES OF OPINION—AND ALL KINDS OF SHOOTING AND SPORTING.
[illegible] of the most [illegible] works on Sporting ever printed.
BY FRANK FORESTER.

Making two large volumes, bound in cloth, gilt, and illustrated with beautiful engraving frontispiece, designed by the Author, and engraved in the finest style of the art.

Be particular to ask for and get the book with the above title, and take no other for it, as this work is allowed by all critics to be superior to anything else ever written by Frank Forester.

Read what the National Magazine for March says of it:

FRANK FORESTER'S SPORTING SCENES AND CHARACTERS. 2 vols. 12mo. Embellished with Frontispiece.—Frank Forester is without a rival in this line. There are no volumes in the language, of the kind, equal to his "Sporting Scenes and Characters." It contains "The Warwick Woodlands," "My Shooting Box," "The Deer-Stalkers," and "The Quarndon Rounds;" the first-named of which alone fills two volumes. The character of Tom Draw will live as long as that of Cooper's Leather-Stocking. Mr. T. B. Peterson has issued Frank Forester in a very elegant style, on thick paper, with graphic embellishments, and in material bindings. These are for gentlemen who will not read the "Sporting Scenes" with delight, and even instruction, for the author is no lumbering compiler of wood-cuts incidents, but a finished Nimrod, who knows how to hit the game.

From the Spirit of the Times, December.

There never was a more fallacious opinion more exploded. Neither more nor less of sociality of the kind could well be imagined. The scenes and characters are at once graphically and glowingly described.

From the Sporting Review.

Those of our readers who are fond of sport, and wish to while away a leisure moment these cold, uncomfortable evenings with a book we are now visiting, in the imaginary chase and wild hunt for game, will find a treasure in Frank Forester's Sporting Scenes and Characters, published by Peterson.

From the Morning Bulletin.

These "Scenes and Characters" have, in a scattered form, long been extremely popular, and have been eagerly bought and sought by the lovers of lively reading. They are now collected and published by T. B. Peterson, in two large volumes, bound in cloth, gilt, illustrated with beautiful sporting scenes, designed by the author, and engraved in the finest style of art. "Those desirous of making an acceptable gift to a sporting friend, should get this beautifully printed and very cheap work.

Price of both volumes, Two Dollars and Fifty Cents.

Copies of the above work will be sent to any person, to any place at all, FREE OF POSTAGE, on their remitting the price to the publisher, in a letter.

Published and for sale by T. B. PETERSON,
No. 102 Chestnut-st., Philadelphia.

CAUTION TO THE PUBLIC.
FRANK FORESTER'S SPORTING SCENES AND CHARACTERS.

The public are hereby notified by the author that this publication is a fraud on the community.

It consists of four old works published many years ago under separate titles, and does not contain one word which the reading world does not know by heart.

It is published without my authority, and I disclaim all connection with it or its publisher.

I consider this to be an attempt to palm some cheap stories—originally written for sporting newspapers, and republished in book form as elaborate sporting works for practical purposes, and therefore I take this occasion to guard the public against being defrauded by a false application of my name. HENRY WM. HERBERT.

SPIERS' FRENCH AND ENGLISH DICTIONARIES.
AUTHORIZED EDITIONS.
JEWETT'S SPIERS' UNABRIDGED FRENCH AND ENGLISH DICTIONARY.
1,000 pages, 8vo. Price $1 50.
JEWETT'S SPIERS' PRONOUNCING SCHOOL DICTIONARY OF THE FRENCH AND ENGLISH LANGUAGES.
716 pages, 12mo. Price, $1 00.

These editions have been edited from the author's latest revised Paris editions, with a view to afford additional aid to the American student. Several hundred English words in general use, not to be found in any other French and English Dictionaries, have been added; and the Americanisms as well as English accepted meanings of words have been carefully inserted where necessary.

JEWETT'S SPIERS' PRONOUNCING SCHOOL DICTIONARY is the only edition of the author's own arrangement, and thereby disregarded of Dr. Spiers' work published in this country. It contains upward of twelve thousand more words than the "Spiers and Surenne," but which is really only Surenne's, as will be seen by the following extract from a letter of Dr. Spiers, dated Paris, Jan. 5, 1857, just received by the publishers:

GENTLEMEN: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of copies of your reprints of my (General French and English Dictionary, and of the school edition of this work. I would render my thanks for this act of courtesy on your part, and I willingly admit that your editions of both these works are some, like what they profess to be, viz.: Revisals of the works the titles of which they bear. You have not, and publisher of your City has done in its one case, added to my work another man's work; in the book entitled 'Spiers' and Surenne's French School Dictionary,' I can see nothing of mine but my name; the rest may be Mr. Surenne's, or for aught I know, Mr.—'s own, or to tell the whole truth, it is rather Master Boyer's work of the fifth century, crammed with gross and ridiculous enter-errors, but having within obscure, absurd definitions instead of the proper equivalents, and those ridiculous blunders that have puzzled the learners and amused the scholars of both countries these five generations past; definitions and blunders so happily blended, that they render the book absolutely useful in our time as would be Boyer's Dictionary for the instruction of our Lord Lord, the one in which Master Boyer's book was first imprinted.

JEWETT'S SPIERS' FRENCH DICTIONARIES have been pronounced the best published by all who have examined them, and the publishers have yet to find that intelligent French scholar who does not give this his warm approval and recommendation. The recommendations of our editions already received are too numerous for publication in this advertisement.

For 1857 the portraits in the Knickerbocker for 1857 will be worth the subscription price.

Joseph Fennimore, the greatest humorist of the day, will contribute his original and peculiar articles, of which we can form no idea from any one scene.

OFFICE OF THE N. Y. AND E. R. R. CO., NEW-YORK, Wednesday, Feb. 11, 1857—4 P. M.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

Dispatches have been received here advising that the road east and west of the bridge over the Delaware River is in good running order, and that temporary structures will be erected by Monday next, that will pass freight and passengers over the bridge.

In the meantime passengers will be carried via New-Jersey Central, and the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroads, to Great Bend, and there connect with the New-York and Erie Railroad for Buffalo, Dunkirk and all points west.

The Camden and Amboy Railroad, between Camden and Bordentown, continues to be impassable for trains, and all passengers for Philadelphia are conveyed by the other route, on the opposite side of the Delaware. The quantity of ice drifted on the track between Bordentown and Camden is said to be very great.

The Freshet at Albany.

CONDITION OF THE HUDSON RIVER RAILROAD—COMPLETE WRECK OF THE STATE-STREET BRIDGE—THE SUFFERING DIMINISHED.

ALBANY, Wednesday, Feb. 11.

The cars on the Hudson River Road, at present go upon the Boston Road to Chatham, and from thence by the Berkshire Road to Hudson, where they get on their own track. The baggage cars go through unopposed. The ice is formed on the river so that teams can now cross. At 6 o'clock last night the river was navigable. The subsiding of the waters relieves the losses in the lower part of the city to have been immense. Nearly every person has met with some losses. Many houses are still inundated, but are accessible from the ice, which somewhat lessens the suffering. The fronts of all the warehouses about State-street Bridge were found battered in; some were entirely gone. The State-street Bridge was found to be a complete wreck. The Hudson River freight dépôt is completely undermined. The Boston Ferry at East Albany has been carried away, and the Greenbush Dock destroyed. At Greenbush the damages and suffering are comparatively greater than here. One houses was flooded so that the attics were resorted to for safety. Scarcely a single person in the village escaped without loss. The amount received by the Relief Committee is over $4,000, and the Distributing Committee are still engaged in relieving, so that the amount of suffering will be materially diminished to-night, notwithstanding the very cold weather.

The Freshet in the Susquehanna River.

HAVRE DE GRACE, Wednesday, Feb. 11—7 P. M.

The ice has been running steadily since daylight yesterday, and has become gorged on the flats two miles below this place. The rise in the water here is about five feet above the usual high tide, and it is still rising slowly. No damage has been done here yet, but at Fort Deposit the damage is very great.

The Tide-Water Canal is under water, but it is thought that the ice gorging outside has been somewhat of a protection.

The Railroad ferry-boat started at 2 o'clock this afternoon, with two trains of passengers from Baltimore, but since 5 o'clock has made no headway, and is not half way across. A number of passengers left her before dusk, and picked their way over on cakes of ice. There is very little prospect of her being able to reach either shore until the ice moves again. No one here has ever seen a greater freshet.

The Freshet in the Cuyahoga River.

From the Cleveland Plain Dealer, Feb. 7.

Since 1832 the water in the Cuyahoga has never been at its present flood-tide. The ice commenced coming down in large masses yesterday morning and gorging at every slight obstruction. It first encountered the structures and floats connecting Scott's Flats with State-street, but finally found its way to the old railroad crossing, yet Cramer's Packing House, which it saminlodged. The dam was almost perfect, and the pressure tremendous. Great apprehensions that the new turnstile bridge would be carried away caused a large force to be engaged by Mr. E. S. Fluery, the bridge intendent of the C. C. & C. R. R., to remove the bridge structure which impeded the free passage of the ice. The ice being easily removed, the structure was taken off, and the ice passed through without any serious crash.

[illegible] room. The ice being easily removed, the [illegible] of the river, and packed in solid form the lake [illegible] the Centre-street bridge, the exit of the [illegible] body of water is entirely precluded. It spreads [illegible] hundreds of acres of the Cleveland Centre and West Side Flats. It has overflowed all the low [illegible], and carried away a large quantity of valuable stock now packed in with the ice. The warehouses of Marwin and River streets, stored with flour, grain and merchandize, have been overflowed, and great damage is already done. HANNA, GARRETT & CO. have some sugars, tobaccos, &c., damaged to the amount of several hundred dollars. [illegible] & Co. have five or six hundred barrels of flour wet and partially destroyed. Other owners of grain meet with losses, the exact amount of which is not yet ascertained.

The pressure of the ice gorge in the river has forced the vessels into perilous positions. The current was so rapid that the current was never so much [illegible] well tested out. The decapitating of the [illegible] is inevitable, and will save the [illegible] of dollars in shipping. The firmness of the ice at the mouth of the river gives hope that the danger to be apprehended by the sudden movement of the gorge of ice and timber, will be prevented. The river attracts half of the people of the city to the unprecedented spectacle presented. Lives are perilled in attempting to save the lumber wedged in the ice, but as yet no accident to life or limb has yet occurred. At 10 o'clock the water was bringing down more ice, but was not rising.

TWELVE O'CLOCK.—MOVEMENTS OF THE ICE-PACK.

To the thousands of our readers who were not spectators of the remarkable picture which the river presented to-day, no description can give a fair idea of the scene. At nine, the ice piled in hideous masses, in a thousand shapes and wedged in with drift-wood, trees, lumber, extended in solid pack from the bottom of the river to three or four feet above the wharves, and from Superior street to a short distance beyond the piers in the lake. The freshet was continually urging this immense field towards the lake. But there is a solid bulwark of ice extending for miles into the lake and evidently anchored fast, prevented the egress of the mass. Every half hour his ice yielded to the terrific pressure behind it, and smaller, grinding and crunching up the big cakes. The big trees and the drift-wood moved slowly down, and piled itself in the mouth of the harbor. The water found little exit by the river, but made its way out into the lake west of the pier, tearing away the Toledo Railroad track, and doing great damage to lumber and buildings.

Occasionally the water, which was at noon about four feet above the level of the lake, would leap over the ice barrier, tear a hole in the dam, and dive under the lake ice, carrying into the vortex vast quantities of ice, and threatening to thrust aside all obstacles to its free and triumphant passage. But the constipation still continues, though the danger of higher water seems to be allayed. The tremendous south wind seems powerless to move the well-anchored field of the mouth of the river, though it seems hardly possible for it to remain till night. The greatest damage done by the water, as yet, is in the warehouses. At Burton's, on the west side, 2,000 bushels of oats and 1,000 of potatoes are under water.

Amongst other losses are RUSSELL & GAZZAM, of salt; HUNTER, HUNTER & CO., and GUYLER & BASH, of flour; WEBSTER, of provisions; and CLARK & CO., of iron and are unchanged. The amount of damage is not ascertained, but the aggregate will be large. J. M. CUMMINGS & CO., with a large force working all night, saved at least $10,000 worth of goods, sugars, teas, &c., from total loss.

Three o'clock.—The ice-pack at the mouth of the harbor burst and precipitated the swollen torrent into the lake. The water fell three feet this afternoon. More than ten thousand people visited the pier to-day to see the extraordinary sights.

Navigation Westward.

PITTSBURG, Tuesday, Feb. 10.

The water in the river here measures eleven feet, and is falling. Weather cold.

CINCINNATI, Tuesday, Feb. 10.

The river at this point has risen two feet since last night, and is still rising, and full of heavy floating ice. Navigation is dangerous. Weather cold.

WHEELING, Tuesday, Feb. 10.

There is no change in the depth of the river here. The ice is still running from the upper rivers, preventing the resumption of navigation.

WHEELING, Wednesday, Feb. 11.

The river at this point has fallen eight feet since yesterday. The water in the channel now measures about sixteen feet, but the ice prevents a resumption of navigation.

ZANESVILLE, Wednesday, Feb. 10.

We learn that the steamer Avery has sunk at Hockingsport, but we have no further particulars.

ST. LOUIS, Wednesday, Feb. 10.

The water in the river at this point has fallen six inches, and continues to recede slowly. The weather is cold and freezing.

The steamer Pioneer sunk on Saturday in the Illinois River, six miles above its mouth. It is feared the ice will tear her to pieces. She was valued at $12,000, and is insured for $8,000. The Missouri River is open to Weston, and the Mississippi to Keokuk.

ST. LOUIS, Wednesday, Feb. 11.

The river is still falling slowly and the weather continues cold. There is less ice running than yesterday.

Committee on Printing—James Kelly, Robert W. Johnson, Washington Smith, John W. Slater and David B. Scott.

On motion of J. E. SNODGRASS, of the Seventh, and GEORGE TRESWILLIGER, of the Fourteenth Wards, suitable resolutions were adopted, congratulating the State and the Nation on the election of Hon. PRESTON KING as Senator, he being a true Republican and a valued addition to the small band now so nobly struggling for liberty in the United States Senate. A second resolution expressed approbation of the course of Hon. HAMILTON FISH during his Senatorial term, as one alike honorable to himself and to the Nation, and true to the principles of the Republican Party.

On motion of JOSEPH C. PINCKNEY, the by-laws, which had been temporarily adopted, were referred to a Committee of three to make necessary amendments, and the Committee adjourned.

The Manhattan Gas Company.

An adjourned meeting of the Special Committee of the Board of Councilmen, to whom was referred the complaints against the Manhattan Gas Company, was held yesterday in the City Hall. Two witnesses were called by the Committee, Mr. CHARLES ROOME, President of the Company, and Mr. CHARLES SABBATON, Engineer. They were questioned as to the relative quality and quantity of the gas used in the last three months of 1855, and also during the last three months of 1856.

They deposed that the quantity of gas burnt during the last three months of 1856 was 24 per cent. greater than had been burnt in the corresponding months of 1855. Also, that the number of their customers had been increased by the addition of 2,300 during the interval from Fall to Fall; that the whole number of consumers was nearly 90,000. Also, that the maximum pressure in 1855 was 2½ inches, in 1856 was 3 inches—and that other things being equal, the increased pressure would be the index of the increased quantity of gas consumed.

After hearing this evidence the Committee adjourned to Friday. Mr. A. J. WILLARD appeared on behalf of the Gas Company, and Mr. W. BOLES on behalf of the Committee.

☞ The City Superintendent and his Assistants have been engaged, the past two days, in making the annual public examination of the Fifteenth Ward Boys' Grammar School, No. 35, on West Thirteenth-street, near the Sixth-avenue, WASHINGTON M. SMITH Principal, with nine assistant teachers.

The attendance is more numerous than it was at the last annual examination.

The various classes were very thoroughly questioned by the examiner, and seemed to be able to answer a majority of the tests readily and intelligently.

The somewhat cold and unsympathetic manner of the principal examiner evidently exerted an influence on the boys, and made the exercises heavy and rather spiritless at times.

The exercises extended over the entire course of studies prescribed by the Board of Education, including compositions and declamation. This school was organized in 1847, and has sent 340 boys to the Free Academy since the organization of that institution.

The entire building has been used as a Boys' School for the past eighteen months, during which time Mr. SMITH has acted as Principal. Sixty-six boys were graduated from No. 35 to the Free Academy last year, with a promise of a similar performance this year. The Primary Department has about fifty boys now waiting promotion to the places about to be vacated by the Fifteenth Ward Class.

☞ The number of vessels in this port yesterday was 436, including 39 steamers, 103 ships, 116 barks, 133 brigs and 46 schooners.

From the Journal of Commerce.

MESSRS. EDITORS: It would appear, from the annexed, that the State of New-York does not own the land at Sandy Hook; and, before the present Quarantine is removed, the advocates of the removal should first point out the spot where they wish to locate it, prior to the passage of the bill now before the Legislature. A. MERCHANT.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 5, 1857.
War Department.

SIR: In reply to your inquiries of 31st ult., I have the honor to inform you that, so far as the records of this Department show, no portion of the land owned by the United States at Sandy Hook has ever been transferred or conveyed to the State of New-York.

An application was made, in 1839, for a transfer of a portion of the same to that State, for hospital purposes, but it was not definitely acted upon, as appears from the records of this Department.

(Signed) JEFFERSON DAVIS, Sec'y War.

COMMON PLEAS—TRIAL TERM.

Before Judge Ingraham.

William Day vs. Van Vleeck, Read, &c.—This action was brought to recover the amount of a draft drawn by the defendants, who are brokers in Wall-street, on the firm of Drexel & Co., of Philadelphia. The defendants set up that there was but $28 paid for the draft, and proved by one of their clerks that a person called at their office for the draft and left a lot of gold on the counter to pay for it. The clerk, thinking there was $50, handed the draft to the person, when it was discovered, shortly after he left, that there was but $28. The defendants telegraphed to the drawers not to pay it. This testimony was corroborated by another clerk. The plaintiff then called the person who got the draft for him and he testifies that he paid $50 for it. The Court left it to the Jury as a question of fact, and they brought in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $51 75-100.

You may depend upon that. CAST IRON PIPES AS CONDUCTORS FOR WATER.—MR. EDITOR: Allow me to suggest the following for the consideration of whom it may concern: It is well known that most pipes echo on the iron by rusting the interior here of the pipe. This rust is formed into what is reclusively called tubercles. What gives them this form? I answer, myriads of animalcules, who make it their home and hiding place. Take these tubercles in warm weather, when the pipe is first removed, and they crush easily into a semi-fluid consistency. This substance—placed to the light in a shallow vessel, by placing the eye a little above its level and back of the light and near it—will be found in a perfect tremor by the agitation of its disturbed inhabitants, although too minute as individuals to be discovered, except by a strong microscope. These tubercles are of their own building, as coral is formed by minute architects. Where the pipes are thickly and deeply covered, as will be found in many places, and the water is not drawn or flushed off frequently, they impart a fishy taste. I know of no remedy, except by getting clear of the rust, to prevent their colonizing and breeding there. INVESTIGATOR.

LONG ISLAND.

Singular and Awful Death.

At an early hour yesterday morning Mrs. CAROLINE B. MERWIN was found dead in the vault at the rear of her residence, No. 151 Sands-street, Brooklyn. Deceased was only married some two months ago, and at different times has been insane. One week ago she attempted to take her life by taking poison, since which time she has been closely watched. On Tuesday night she retired with her husband, and a sister, who was on the watch in an adjoining room, feeling fatigued, lay down upon a sofa and dropped asleep. At 3 o'clock yesterday morning Mr. MERWIN awoke and missed his wife; a search was instituted and the body was subsequently found in the vault as above stated, dead. She had stripped herself naked and jumped in. Coroner REDDING yesterday held an inquest.

Brooklyn Normal School Examination.

The Semi-annual Examination of the pupils of the Saturday Normal School, held in No. 14, on Navy-street, closed with interesting exercises on Friday last. The examinations lasted for two days, and were conducted under the direction of the Normal School Committee, Judge COPELAND, aided by Superintendent BULKLEY, and his associate teachers of the School. The number of junior teachers present as members of the various classes, was over three hundred, a large majority of whom were promoted one grade, after a very searching examination, thus showing that a good degree of interest prevails among the pupils.

Closing of the Brooklyn Evening Schools.

The evening schools, under the care of the Board of Education, closed on Thursday and Friday evenings of the past week, with the exception of Mr. SYMMES' School, No. 6, which will close on the evening of the 18th inst.

These schools have been well attended, and a very respectable advancement has been made by a majority of the pupils.

The most decided success has attended the school held in No. 18, on Remsen-street, (Eastern District,) under the care of Mr. EDWARD BUSH, Principal of the Boys' Grammar School, as the following statistics will indicate:

The total number of names on register, 600; average attendance, 205. The greatest number present at one session, 255, the average attendance being less than one-third of the registered number.

The attendance of the members of the Board of Education, and the City Superintendent, with numerous visitors, added to the interest of the closing exercises.

Supposed Poisoning Case.

A boy, named GARLAND, 12 years of age, residing at the corner of Lequeer and Columbia streets, South Brooklyn, died very suddenly yesterday morning, under circumstances which induced the belief that he was poisoned. Coroner REDDING has the case in charge and will investigate it to-day.

Attempt to Kill.

A woman 36 years of age was committed by Justice MORNEUS in Brooklyn, yesterday, to answer a charge of attempting to kill her husband aged about 60 years. She beat him with an ax on the head until he was senseless.

Kings County Court of Sessions.

In this Court yesterday, George Welsh pleaded guilty to an indictment for bigamy, and was sentenced to 2 years and 2 months imprisonment.

Several prisoners were arraigned when the Court adjourned.

DEATH FROM HYDROPHOBIA.—A friend writes us as follows: "A most distressing case of hydrophobia occurred in East Fallowship township, Chester County, last week, which resulted in the death of a lad named JOHN GOON, son of JACOB GOON. The boy was at the barn with his brothers, and saw a pretty little black dog pass by, which he ran out and picked up, and played with him for some time. The dog, however, bit him on the finger, making a slight incision. The wound was tied up, and no serious result was apprehended, as the dog was not supposed to be mad. One morning, after the occurrence, the lad attempted to wash his face, and having immersed his hands in the water, was seized with convulsions of so violent a character that he died in a few hours. The lad was remarkably promising and a great favorite, for his many exemplary qualities. He was about 13 years of age."—Philadelphia Journal.

MURDER SUSPECTED, AND A WHOLE FAMILY ARRESTED.—On Monday, Justice CHASE issued warrants for the arrest of a family named MILLIGAN, living near Brownstown, in this County, on suspicion that they had murdered a Jew peddler named KIPPER, for his money and goods. The authorities were informed that the peddler had been seen going into the house of MILLIGAN, and had not been seen or heard of since. Human bones, masses of hair and numerous bloodstains were found in and about the premises, which, together with other circumstances, seemed to warrant an investigation of the matter. A brother of the missing peddler deposes that his brother agreed to meet him in this city last week, but failed to do so. Officers proceeded to the house of MILLIGAN on Monday, where they found the father of the family sick, and unable to be removed. The remainder of the family, consisting of the mother, two daughters, and a boy, were arrested and brought to this city yesterday, and are now in jail. They give unsatisfactory accounts of the bloodstains which were seen on the ceiling, walls, and floor of the house, telling conflicting stories; and it is said they stand in rather bad repute in the neighborhood. As soon as the affair is further investigated, we shall give the particulars.—Detroit Advertiser.

At the last meeting of the Board of Overseers of Harvard College, attempts were made to initiate two important reforms in the management of this institution.

WEDNESDAY, Feb. 11—P. M.

There was less disturbance in Money affairs to-day than on Tuesday, though the interruption to the mails and the difficulty of sending goods to and communicating with the West, are prejudicial to an easy movement in the Street. The terms made between borrower and lender are in favor of the latter, but the supply is not difficult at the price. The Discount Brokers are charging 9 ⅌ cent. on the very best short paper, and the Money Brokers who carry Stocks are getting at the rate of 12@14 ⅌ cent. on the best class of collateral, while 15@18 ⅌ cent. is paid on time bargains made at the Stock Exchange Board. These terms are partly induced by the heavy fall on part of the share list within the last two or three days; buyers being ready to pay liberally for 30 or 60 days, where the prices have been knocked down without any apparent or reasonable cause, as in the cases, to-day, of the Southern Michigan, Cleveland and Toledo, New-York Central, &c. There is nothing doing in Foreign Bills since the clearing of the Boston mail yesterday. The Custom Duties at the Sub-Treasury were again heavy to-day, though not so large as yesterday. They are expected to fall off further toward the close of the week. The receipts at the Sub-Treasury were $316,069; payments, $32,912; balance, $14,356,600. Some of our very nervous Bank Cashiers have given out that they have further orders to put up Gold for New-Orleans and Mobile. The Southern steamer does not sail until Saturday, by which time a supply from California is more than probable; but these gentlemen, always anxious in a close market for money to meet trouble more than half way, are very charitably affording food for the panic to the croakers of the Stock Exchange in advance of the mail.

The closing prices at the Stock Board this afternoon are not materially different from yesterday, although the fluctuations on part of the list through the day were quite violent. The Bears, having an inkling of what they could have learnt any day at the office on proper inquiry, that an offer for 4,000 shares of the Goshen Stock of the Southern Michigan Company, at 90 ⅌ cent. ex dividend, was accepted some weeks ago by the Board of Directors, in full session, have been quite confident for several days that a mysterious impression of fraud or over-issue could or would be created in the process of transferring the new Stock. So for some days past the contract sales for future delivery, as well as the cash sales of Stock borrowed for the purpose have been shaped accordingly. The lowest sales this forenoon were at 72½ ⅌ cent. Yesterday afternoon 75@74¾. The orders in the market between the sessions of the Board put up the price to 73¾@74, and this afternoon these rates were paid cash, and 77 buyer 60 days. Of course so far as the stalking insinuation of fraud or moral wrong inside the office is at issue, it is merely designed to frighten the timid from dealing in the stock, or to alarm the nervous into selling out. There is no truth or reasonable foundation for it. Everything done in the way of creating or selling the stock or Bonds of the Company is by order of a Board of Management as responsible in character and as largely respectable in reputation as the Directors of the Bank of America or Bank of Commerce, and their subordinates or transfer officers as incapable of fraud.

The Herald should be more seasonable in its efforts at panic-making. The middle of February, on the eve of a Spring trade which promises to be one of the most profitable, as it must be the largest ever known, is the wrong period for ruining the country. There has been no Foreign bal
